

Sunday, November 18. 2007

PHP Devnetwork Forums: Now cooler than ever!

The coolest PHP forum ever spawned, PHP Developers Network Forum has had Christmas early. With the move to a new server following some troublesome hosting problems recently which led to issues accessing the forum for my daily (well, hourly at times) dose of everything an excellent PHP community offers, it's back.

To quote Kieran Huggins :

Wicked! Blazing fast and twice as sexy.

A hearty thanks to all involved. Here's how damn addictive it is:

Our users have posted a total of 420710 articles
We have 34110 registered users

Add to that how many libraries members have written - like Swiftmailer and HTMLPurifier and PHPSpec and SHA256 Native PHP and AP3 and ... well you get the point. Cool developers, decent folk, countless PHP questions from the mundane to the theoretical heights answered every day. Even I barely get a post in edgeways!

Posted by Pádraic Brady in PHP General, PHP Security at 03:12

Anonymous on Nov 18 2007, 07:37

Wow, it's been a loooooong time since we started those up. It's great to see that they're still around and still very popular.

Anonymous

on Nov 20 2007, 14:38

hmm...I can't access it

I get server not found when I try to access forums.devnetwork.net . Anonymous on Nov 28 2007, 14:47

Yeah, the domain is having some DNS issues with one of the nameservers at the moment. You can get alternate access using a proxy, or using the non-pretty URL:

<http://216.32.90.210/~devnet/forums> Anonymous on Nov 28 2007, 15:14

Yeah, this is a very very cool blog.

I just added you to my favorites.

Thanx,

Mikey Anonymous on Nov 28 2007, 20:16